CHARLESTON.

MONDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 3, 1868.

War With England.

In our telegraphic columns this morning will be found a dispatch, in relation to the Alabama claims, which is calculated to exercise a pernicious influence in commercial and financial circles.

The question now is will there be war between the United States and England? We think not. Certainly not because of government to starve, and freeze, and chain, the Alabama claims. There is no reason whatever for believing that England desires war with the United States; and however strong the war spirit may be in Congress, in the United States army and navy, and in that other army of contractors and speculators, which, having tasted the sweets of fat contracts desires a repetition of those crumbs from the national table-it takes two to make a quarrel; and just as no war arose from the "Trent affair," because the United States were unwilling to entangle themselves at that time in such a complication, so, we believe, there will be no war now, because it is manifestly contrary to the interests of Great Britain at this time to plunge into so serious a national calamity, when the same may be so easily avoided.

It is not necessary now to discuss the merits of the Alabama claims. It is enough to know that England has her hands full at present, with Fenianism, the Reform question, and the Abyssinian war; and that the mere rumor of war with the United States would give courage to the discontented and cause alarm to the well-affected throughout the length and breadth of her dominions. England wants peace, and will make any honorable sacrifice to maintain it.

We are in no better position to go to war than is England; nay, in some respects, our disabilities are much greater. We have just come out of a long and exhaustive struggle, that has taxed the energies and resources of the country to the utmost. We have a debt as large very nearly as that of Great Britain, but in a much less satisfactory shape; our finances are in a muddle, and business is prostrate. We are in the midst of a revolution; our internal dissensions are of a far more serious and radical character than those of England, maugre Fenians, JOHN BRIGHT, Trades Unions and King THEODORE. Still those who have control of our government are reckens-quite willing to run the risk of war, in view of its effect on the elections next summer and autumn. Bullying Mr. Bull is a popular card. First and foremost it conciliates the "Irish element." 2. It gratifies a long harbored resentment because of England's sympathy with the "rebels." 3. There may be some silly enough to think that by a foreign war the home breaches can be mended; and 4. There is the large class, alluded to above, who are personally interested, and expect to vault into the gilded regions of shoddydom by such a turn of fortune's wheel. On the whole, we believe, that neither nation has anything to gain, but much to lose, by a war at this time, and we therefore cannot doubt that wiser counsels will prevail, and a conciliatory course make such an alternative altogether improbable. Every man in England is not a fool. Every man in America is not a knave. As long as there are men in both countries who have sense enough to see what is right and honesty enough to do it, there will be no war between the moulting American eagle and the sleeping British lion. But it will not do to carry out too literally the traditions of Donnybrook Fair. "Will any gentleman tread on the tail of my coat?" is an insurance policy for $3000, got on a railroad more becoming the individual fire-eater than representative or Congressional wisdom. The United States can, of course, whip this world and the next; but a mortal year. Teak is sometimes used as backing for struggle with Eugland would certainly be troublesome and might be rather dangerous.

A War Against Europe!

It is reported that General BANKS' bill relating to the rights of naturalized citizens abroad, and instituting reprisals when the American law is violated, meets with the unanimous favor of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Should it pass the House. as is probable, complications so serious will arise with England and Prussia, as even the dexterous Secretary of State can scarcely resolve. The bill is simply a war measure. It wrests the Gordian knot out of the hands of diplomacy and cuts it with

The importance of some measure of relief is universally admitted. The naturalized citizens of this country, with their descendants, constitute the larger part of the whole population. The report of the House committee estimates them as more than twenty millions. Of course, the United States repudiates the feudal doctrine of perpetual allegiance which would deprive her of the services of all these citizens, and of the right to protect them in foreign lands. But here is the difficulty. The laws of Europe and America in regard to the status of our foreign born citizens coning the right of voluntary expatriation and the validity of naturalization. Practically, Europe, since the war of 1812, has waived her claim to the indefeasable allegiance of her subjects, so long as they reside on our domain, or are sheltered beneath our flag born subject returns within her own jurisdiction. She refuses to allow American legislation, in this instance, to affect the ctatus own courts. She insists that, as her law cannot control the rights and liabilities of neither can American law control their rights and liabilities when they return to their native land. The whole subject is as embarrassing as it is important.

It is clear enough that neither the rights of our adopted citizens, nor the honor of our country can be shielded by the bill of General Banks. To declare war against all Europe would be simply absurd; to threaten it without daring to wage it would be humiliating. We should even lose the advantages we now possess-the moral influence at Berlin and St. James which has often interposed to discharge from the ranks, and to rescue from the prison house and the gibbet. And, to adopt reprisals such as General Banks recommends; to seize upon barmless travellers and merchants from England and Germany, and to cast them into those dreary Bastiles which the shades of martyred patriots haunt, and whence the grouns of starving and freezing men have soarcely yet departed;-in a word, to repeat the shameful history of the past, would outrage the feelings of those very Germans and Irishmen, whose favor this bill solicits. They do not want the and kick, and curse, and stab with bayonets, and shoot down any honest compatriot who has thrown himself upon the hospitalities of America.

The subject is one which requires diplomacy, not bluster. Foreign nations should be addressed in a kind and manly tone. A measure so unjust, childish and petulant, to say the least, as that of General BANKS, would prejudice instead of maintaining the rights of our adopted citizens. And it would be unworthy of a great people.
